Year in review

2017 was the first year in which food-security pilots became a defined program area alongside education and volunteer service. GSO maintained a steady school-support operation while testing three practical livelihood activities in Chankiek village: beekeeping, goat deployment, and protected food production through a shade house.

The annual budget remained close to the prior year at approximately $124,000. The organization continued free English programs, school materials, local teacher support, volunteer placements, transport, equipment use, and community activities. The new food-security pilots were intentionally small, designed to test local feasibility before wider deployment.
